The problem with culinary advertisements

(Redirected from TheProblemWithCulinaryAds.odt) reason: 404 – not found

Points: gross, unethical, evil, not suitable for a lot of people

They are gross to a lot of people

I am someone who is highly grossed out by culinary ads, especially when it involves mixed food (such as Okra, salad, pizza, soup, stew, etc.) or food with meat in it. It is extremely gross to see sliced animal carcasses being advertised to me over and over. I am not going to eat it, there is nothing you can do to make me eat turkey meat (or other meat at this point, as I have been vegetarian since February 2021, after a 12 year set of constant decisions on going vegetarian) I wouldn't even do it for a million dollars, as I am physically unable to. Even if you held me at gunpoint, I still couldn't do it, as I have strong mental barriers (I have tested this, no death threat works) You know who I am talking about (Arby's, Subway, etc.)

Should not play at certain times

It is highly immoral for food to be advertised on shows about eating disorders. How is this not common sense? This is highly unethical and evil. If I need to be specific, shows about 600 lb pound people and so on should NEVER have had food ads being played on the side. It is ridiculous that I need to even be saying this. It only fuels their disorder, and is just plain wrong.

V1: May 27th 2021 at 11:31:31 pm